Daintree Rainforest

At an estimated 180 million years old, the Daintree Rainforest is regarded as the world's oldest living rainforest. It is one of the most complex ecosystems on earth, home to living examples of ancient plants unique to the area as well as hundreds of species of birds, animals and reptiles. Spanning 120,000 hectares (approx. 297,000 acres), the Daintree Rainforest is the largest tropical rainforest in Australia.

The Daintree Rainforest was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage list in 1988. Mossman Gorge forms the southern sector of the rainforest. Located 80km north of Cairns, the Daintree region remains in pristine condition, affording visitors to Mossman Gorge and the surrounding Daintree Rainforest chance to revel in its beauty.

Around 3,000 plant species from over 210 broader families are found within the Daintree Rainforest and extended Wet Tropics region. Twelve out of the world's 19 families of primitive flowering plants grow within the region and within these at least 50 species are found only within the tropics. From the forest floor right up to its towering canopy, the surroundings spellbind with the beauty of plant life. The diverse range of plants includes primitive cycads, ferns and mosses and forms a natural archive of evolution in Australia.

Thriving among the lush vegetation are some of Australia's rarest wildlife species. One third of Australia's 315 mammal species call the Daintree Rainforest home. Thirteen of these species cannot be found anywhere else in the world, including unique green possums, ringtail possums, fierce marsupial cats, rare bats, tree kangaroos and the shy Boyd Forest Dragon. The endangered spotted-tail quolls which inhabit the rainforest are another rare sight, distinguished by their red-brown fur, white spots and long slender tails.

More than 430 bird species have been spotted at Mossman Gorge including the Australian pelican, Little Pied Cormorant, Great Egret and the endangered Southern Cassowary.

The region is home to a quarter of Australia's frog population, around a third of the country's freshwater fish and one of the world's largest butterfly colonies.

Great Barrier Reef

At 348,000 square kilometres, the Great Barrier Reef is the world's largest and most diverse coral reef ecosystem.

Within the Great Barrier Reef are some 2,500 individual reefs and more than 900 islands, ranging from small sandy cays to larger continental islands. Collectively these land and seascapes provide some of the most spectacular maritime scenery in the world.

As the world's most complex expanse of coral reefs, the Great Barrier Reef contains some 400 species of corals. The waters also provide significant feeding grounds for one of the world's largest populations of dugong, while at least 30 species of whales and dolphins are found here, and it is a popular spot for humpback whale calving. Six of the world's seven species of marine turtle are found in the Great Barrier Reef.

Local Indigenous Culture

The Kuku Yalanji people are the indigenous inhabitants of the Daintree Rainforest whose history dates some 50,000 years. The Kuku Yalanji are true rainforest people, living in harmony with their natural environment. The Kuku Yalanji culture is built around a deep respect for nature and an intimate knowledge of its cycles. Their knowledge has been passed down through generations.

The rainforest is part of the Kuku Yalanji, and they are part of it, a concept that is brought to life during an Indigenous guided walking tour of Mossman Gorge, where guides share their culture and heritage, explain the history of cave paintings and provide a compelling ongoing narrative of the rainforest.

One of the most popular legends is a tale about Manjal Dimbi or Mount Demi, the most prominent mountain in the region. Roughly translated, Manjal Dimbi means 'mountain holding back'. According to Aboriginal stories, the large humanoid rock represents Kubirri, who came to the aid of the Kuku Yalanji when they were persecuted by the evil spirit, Wurrumbu. Kubirri is known as the 'Good Shepherd'.

Kuku Yalanji country extends from Mossman in the south to Cooktown in the north and Palmer River in the west.

Environment

Baillie Lodges operates all its properties under a detailed Sustainable Management policy. Each lodge has been designed to minimise its impact on the local environment and utilise the best available technology to reduce energy consumption and waste.

Silky Oaks Lodge works to an Environmental Management Plan (EMP), an overarching document that outlines how Silky Oaks Lodge operates to efficiently manage resources, details the responsibilities of all employees, and meets targets designed to improve environmental management.

The EMP offers a summary of how Silky Oaks manages compliance, sustainability, resource usage, risk and ecosystems. Specific management plans provide the details for each of these aspects and prescribes the resort's activities and systems relating to the environment, from water and waste management to energy conservation.

Silky Oaks Lodge has a dedicated energy management plan, designed to improve the efficient use and conservation of energy. Silky Oaks operates on mains power supplied from the Mossman power grid, with a generator onsite for use in times of power loss. Energy efficient equipment reduces energy consumption including low wattage light globes and 'daylight switches'. Guest treehouses are set high above the Mossman River and among the rainforest canopy, with deep verandas and wide doors allowing cool breezes to flow to guest areas, reducing the need for air-conditioning.

A Waste Management plan has also been developed to reduce products brought into the resort and improve the reuse and recycling of waste materials. Recycled materials include glass, aluminium and plastics, paper and cardboard, cooking oil, printer cartridges and vehicle batteries.

All waste water at Silky Oaks Lodge is sent to the property's own waste water management plant, a gated facility located 200 metres from the resort. Waste water is processed through a sand filter system and used to irrigate the property's forested areas via a sprinkler system.

Local History

The Daintree Rainforest region was originally home to the Kuku Yalanji First Nations people who lived well on the rich array of plants and animals on their traditional land.

British explorer Captain James Cook discovered the region as part of his world voyage in 1770 and named Cape Tribulation because 'here began all our troubles' after his ship, the Endeavour, ran aground on a reef. The ship made port in subsequently named Cooktown as repairs were made, and it was the first time Europeans had settled, albeit briefly, on the east coast of Australia.

In 1873 George Elphinstone Dalrymple led the first exploration deep into the Daintree River valley, naming the river after Richard Daintree, a prominent geologist and Queensland's Agent-General in London.

During the voyage, Dalrymple noted extensive areas of land suitable for agriculture but more importantly, he found huge stands of the valuable red cedar tree, commonly referred to as 'red gold'. European settlers, attracted by the discovery, as well as the potential for mineral mining soon arrived in the area. Unfortunately this ultimately led to the eradication of the red cedars from the area, and was the catalyst for environmental protections to be put in place.

The Daintree River played an important part in establishing the Mossman Village as this was the only access point until 1933 when the road to Mossman was completed.

In 1967, the Mossman Gorge section of the Daintree was declared a National Park by the Queensland State Government. In 1988 the Daintree National Park received World Heritage listing by UNESCO in recognition of its universal natural values and is now part of the Wet Tropics World Heritage Area (WTWHA).

The Silky Oaks Lodge concept was created as recently as 1985, when hoteliers Moss and Theresa Hunt bought the 80-hectare block, which, like much of the rainforest of North Queensland, had been heavily logged throughout the 1800's and 1900's. It wasn't until after 1993, when P&O Resorts purchased the property, that around 200 endangered native rainforest species were gradually reintroduced. Inevitably these new plants attracted many of the fauna from the surrounding national park so that today, Silky Oaks is home to some 74 species of mammal, 150 species of reptile and 330 species of bird. In 2009 tennis champion Paul van Min purchased the property with his wife Barbara. The couple owned and operated Silky Oaks Lodge until 2019 when it was bought by Baillie Lodges.

Weather

Part of the Wet Tropics of Queensland World Heritage Area, the Daintree climate is characterised by two distinct seasons: the dry season from April to November offers warm days and cool nights with low humidity ranging in temperature from 19-30°C; December to March is considered the green season as the days and nights are hotter with more frequent restorative showers and temperatures between 22-32°C. This is a spectacular time to visit as waterfalls and creeks are in full flow.

Regardless of the time of year, guests should ensure they include sunscreen and a hat when packing.

Photography

High quality photographs are available for download via the Baillie Lodges trade and media console. Additional images along specific themes are also available on request.

A Commercial Activity Permit (CAP) is required for commercial photography and filming in Queensland's national parks if the activity involves 11 or more people and is with or without prescribed structures. Filming and photography activities involving up to 10 people without prescribed structures do not require a CAP.
